

UNIVERSITY OF NEW HAVEN

Special offer for career firefighters

The University of New Haven has instituted a new program offering all career firefighters a 50% discount in tuition for its two master degree programs and four certificate programs. These programs are designed to build on the professional's undergraduate degree to provide finishing skills in the area of Budgeting, Ethics, Public Administration and Strategic Planning. Add to these, a host of electives such as Emergency Management and Fire Investigation.

Two Masters degree's

Fire Administration
Fire Investigation

Four Certificate Programs

Emergency Management
Fire/Arson Investigation
Fire Science Technology
Public Safety Management

Courses are offered in a number of formats to meet the needs of the working professional, some courses are offered at the UNH main campus; some are offered in a hybrid style partially on-line and partially in a traditional classroom setting. Current national needs indicate that trained fire protection specialists are in extremely limited supply. Job opportunities in the insurance field, industry, and government service may involve applications engineering, research and product design, building and systems design, fire hazard analysis, and marketing of equipment.

The fire science program covers a wide range of topics including the proper design, arrangement and use of building materials; analysis of fire and explosion hazards; safe design of industrial processes; management of property loss control and insurance programs; investigation of fires; management in the public sector; and safe design, selection and handling of equipment and materials. Updated skills are provided in the application of fire protection principles to fire department, water supply and building code aspects of community planning.
